

Why I Left | JW.ORG

I thought I'd take a little time to share why I left the religion known as Jehovah's Witnesses, and why I will never return.

I'll spare you the details of my story as a JW, but if you'd like to know more... feel free to reach out and ask anything!

I have seen so many videos on why people are leaving. It has helped so many, including me, realize I am not alone in my decision.

So let's talk about why everyone is leaving... Let's talk about this without judgement of the organization.

If we boil the stories down... it reveals that everyone leaves because of a feeling. Feelings reside in a wide reaching spectrum between Love and Fear. Each individual perceives and labels these emotions or vibrations in their own way.

So on one side, we have unconditional love, which we feel in moments of complete acceptance. On the other side, we have crippling fear, in which you feel such complete separation, you are cut off from the flow of reality and sometimes you literally can't move.

Everyone seems to be leaving because they get a certain catalyst that causes a fearful emotion leading to separation from the organization. This is also the same reason people are stuck in it, wanting to keep separate from the world they fear so much.

The science of Fear and Love has been proven through the HeartMath Institute in which they have measured the frequencies our hearts produce when feeling different emotions. They found that all negative emotions give off a certain vibration, and then all positive emotions give off a different vibration.

We were told as Jehovah's Witnesses... God is Love, but we are required to also Fear God. This is very confusing and goes against common sense.

Everyone seeks Love, but no one typically likes to feel Fear. This seems like a common sense we share. So on my search for unconditional love, I have not found it anywhere but within my Self. If we look for Love outside of ourSelf, we will never find it. You will only find an illusive "condition" that ends up being better labeled as Light.

This is because Love is not something we give or take. Love is the core vibration that exists. We either let it in, or become separated from it by not letting it in, or feeling what we label as Fear... a cutting off of this vibration.

Another clue of this, is the saying, "If you truly Love someone (or something), set it free." If you think about this deeply, you'll realize it's saying to let go of the material realm, or what I personally label as Light.

So, if Lucifer is considered the light bearer, or you believe the "Devil is in control of the condition of this system of things"... are you getting it now? If the true "God" is Love, and that Love resides as a vibration within our hearts, then what should we be doing? This is not something you can teach, just experience. I only share my experience, and encourage others to seek within to find unconditional Love and insight, rather than get caught in Fear, only accepting information or knowledge from the illusion that is Light.

I left the Jehovah's Witnesses because they are Fear based. I Am... not. I Am... Love.
